

INDIA'S SANITATION CRISIS

We Are Bringing Toilets and Hygiene Education to India's Rural Poor

Hello [[first_name]],

There is, and has been for generations, a sanitation crisis in India. But we're working to fix it. (And you can help!)

Addressing this critical problem requires not only building toilets for people in rural areas, but also providing these individuals with education about sanitation and hygiene in general. Just last year, we provided hundreds of underprivileged families with life-saving tools and resources to become safer and healthier, and this year we aim to do even more.

We invite you to read our blog, where you can learn more about India's dire sanitation situation — including how you can contribute to our efforts to tackle this complex issue.

Our Partner NGO

We've partnered with Environmental Sanitation Institute, an on-the-ground NGO operating in several villages in the state of Gujarat. ESI's philosophy is based on the Gandhian values of sustainable development.

Toilet Construction

With the help of local community members, workers at ESI provide families with newly constructed two-pit pour-flush toilets. These sustainable latrines use minimal water and are easy to maintain.

Sanitation Education

To spread knowledge about sanitation, ESI's trainers utilize a holistic approach and collaborate with locals to emphasize interactive learning. Training is tailored for men, women, and children individually.
